Book Title: H. C. Chandler & Co.'s Business Directory For Indiana

MADISON.

The county seat of Jefferson county, situated on the Ohio river at the terminus of the Indianapolis & Madison railroad, eighty-two miles from Indianapolis, one hundred from Cincinnati, and fifty from Louisville. It is beautifully situated on the north bank of the Ohio, surrounded by high and picturesque hills, making it one of the most beautiful situations in the State; and the arrangement and taste with which the city is laid out show that the founders were not unmindful of this fact. The streets are wide and arranged with good taste and well paved.
It was at one day considered one of the first towns in the State; but not availing itself of any facilities in the way of outlets or railroad communication, it has lost much of its former business as a wholesale point. It has several large manufacturing establishments, of various kinds, all of which are doing a good business, and in this respect it ranks with many of our larger towns. The religious and scholastic interests of the place are equal to any of our cities. It has an excellent daily paper of good circulation and wide influence.

The population is about 13,000.
